Bangladesh Native Teaches Here

Appomattox is a "growing town" all right, but it has a bit of catching up to do to match the native city of a native of East Pakistan (now Bangladesh) who is now teaching at the Intermediate School here.

The teacher is Mr. Wadiur Rahim, who came to the United States in 1967 from Dacca, capital of East Pakistan (Bandladesh). He is a graduate of Tri-State College in Indiana, a college of engineering and is an electrical engineer with additional study completed at VPI-SU, Blacksburg.

Mr. Rahim, who has "always wanted to teach" is interested in college teaching but at present finds teaching junior high age students enough of a challenge.

His father, now retired, has been manager of an electrical utility company in East Pakistan, and was educated in India and Britain.

The new nation of Bangladesh is about the size of Virginia, according to Mr. Rahim. His early schooling included study in a Catholic mission school although religious beliefs in the Rahim home are in the Moslem tradition.

One of his grandmothers was half-Irish, but he says that story is really "too complicated" to go into. He adds that students and others often ask him if his family is "rich" but he rates the Rahims as "middle of the road", although comparison with the very poor of Bangladesh would make almost anyone feel "quite rich", he says.

He hears from his family with letters going through India. At home are his parents - his father is a retired manager of an electrical utility company and he has one brother, Mr. Rahim and his wife, who teaches in sixth grade in Botetourt county, plan to go back to his native country this summer.

He says that his native land has "lots of rain" - 150 to 200 inches of rain each year and lies right on the Tropic of Cancer, putting its country in the torrid-temperate zone. There 's no snow there with coldest temperatures about 50-55 degrees.

After coming to this country Mr. Rahim completed college study and was a camp counselor in New York.

He speaks flawless English, result of the fact that his family back home speaks English almost exclusively. In fact, Mr. Rahim knows very few words of his native tongue, Bengali. His varied interests and popularity with students attests to the fact that a qualified engineer can be a skillful teacher. Mr. Rahim says that "openess" of spirit to new teaching ideas here and a "flexible attitude" toward teaching procedures makes for a very compatible situation. To put it in non-engineering terms, he appears to be glad he came to Appomattox.

There's no snow in Mr. Wadiur Rahim's native country, Bangladesh (East Pakistan), so with the principal's permission (?) he made one great snowball Thursday afternoon to celebrate a beautiful day! Mr. Rahim teaches eighth grade at Appomattox Intermediate School.
